I can't remember the chorus riff off the top of my head.
I'll post it tomorrow.

Well I have a little more Tab on this song, I have posted the whole song so it will be easier. If I ever get a chance I will try to finish it and put all the words into it. Actually, am I the only one who cares. If no

Well, here you go...this is the whole song for Thunder Kiss '65 minus the solos which is just basically wacking off in the key of E. This is definitely the right sounding way to play this. I tabbed this out awhile back and it's still the only one I've done because I lost my copy of Tabedit and I can't find it anywhere.

Pay attention to the distance between each of the notes, I tried to keep the timing right between them. And of course read the little things I wrote or you might get lost. Whenever a part I tabbed out was repeated I just made a note to play that part again. The only symbol I used in this was ~~, it just means vibrato. The only other real techniques this song uses is palm muting, haven't figured out how to put that in tablature yet though...but you should be able to tell what notes are palm muted.

One last note, that rhythm over the main guitar solo can be a bit tricky at first....even though it doesn't look like it. Just listen to the record to get it right, it's really not that hard once you get it down.
